

I fully support the NCVec petition because it is the only one that makes any sense. I do not believe that a mode of communication should be a basis for any class of license. Ban plan access is the only motivation for anyone to advance in class. If mode of communication was so Important, then why do we not have to pass tests for RTTY, PSK31, Slow scan TV, and all the other modes of communication. This outdated form of communication (morse code) is significant only in the fact that it is just another mode of communication that a HAM may use. Nothing will ever prevent any HAM from learning the Morse Code if that is what he/she wants, but simply imposing it on all classes just because it may have been the original form of radio communications is totally ridiculous. That is like saying to all americans you must learn to communicate in spanish and english (which might not be such a bad idea) before you can transmit over certain frequencies!!?? How stupid can it get?? After all it is not any sign of intelligence to be able to send and receive ...'s ----'s over a radio. My computer can do that for me at a much more efficient speed. Wonder what would have happened in the field of Physics if that first University Albert Einstein applied to had actually given him a professorship???
